

ADDITIONAL BOSSES

The first bonus content ever released for Fabula Ultima was Zuccaborg, the Arisen: not only was it additional example of a boss-tier adversary, but our first attempt at providing readers with a multi-part boss they could turn to for reference.

This was followed by two more bosses: Typhos, Boreal Queen (during the 2021 Winter Holidays) and Carmilla (2022 Halloween Bonus). No more bosses were released after this point; bonus contents focused more on Player Character options and alternate rules instead.

UPDATED AND ENRICHED

This section presents new and updated versions of the bosses mentioned above, in line with the standard profiles found within Fabula Ultima's Bestiary Vol. I. The profiles for Zuccaborg and Typhos are also accompanied by new illustrations from the hands of Richmond Montañano and Yitanran, partially based on the rough original sketches by Emanuele Galletto.

The mechanics and abilities of each boss were also slightly tweaked where it was deemed necessary, and tactical routines have been added.

Overall, whether you already knew the original form of these creatures or are encountering them for the first time here, we hope they will inspire you!

BEHIND THE SCENES

Each of the bosses presented in this section has its own story, although some take themselves far more seriously than others.

CARMILLA

Inspired by the vampire created by Sheridan Le Fanu in 1872, not to mention the Castlevania series, Carmilla is actually an ancient vampiric demon possessing the undead body of an unfortunate noblewoman. She has become the ageless ruler of Cairnstein Castle, a great fortress towering over the mountain pass between two nations. The idea was for Game Masters to introduce Carmilla as a threat or obstacle when the group crosses any mountainous border during the campaign, or potentially as a far more influential, long-term antagonist.

Together with Tragedia (from the High Fantasy Atlas), Carmilla was also among the first instances of a two-phase boss in our published contents.

TYPHOS, BOREAL QUEEN

This colossal draconic boss was initially written for the first Fabula Ultima campaign ever played during the 2020 pandemic. She originally had a slightly different name, and was connected to a Player Character whose latent Arcanist powers had just awakened: in the end, the story took a different direction and she never became part of it. Born in the ancient age when Arcana still roamed the world, Typhos was sealed within permafrost, where she slept for centuries: once freed, she would have begun hunting down the very descendants of those who imprisoned her.

Since that first campaign was first and foremost a “stress test” for the Fabula Ultima system, all Player Characters were both memorable and heavily optimized. This is reflected in Typhos herself, who features a few nasty gimmicks and can hit extremely hard for a level 20 boss. If you wish to include her in your own campaign, consider waiting until the Player Characters themselves are level 20... or spend some time thinking about interesting and thematic Surrender consequences!

ZUCCABORG, THE ARISEN

Originally designed in Italian (where “zucca” means “pumpkin”), this grotesque and somewhat comical boss was meant to be used by groups that decided to celebrate Halloween with Fabula Ultima, showcasing a variety of important mechanics:

- ♦ Zuccaborg is a single entity in the narrative, but is represented by a combination of three different profiles, allowing multi-target abilities to retain their effectiveness.
- ♦ The CPU (Central Pumpkin Unit) can regenerate destroyed limbs, but does so at the cost of Ultima Points, thus adding a new way to spend them.
- ♦ The various profiles belong to different species, setting an important precedent for bosses: splitting them into multiple parts can act as a tool for storytelling and better express their nature. In this case, the boss’s main body is considered undead as it hosts the soul of Dr. Zuccaborg; the two arms belong to the construct and plant species, respectively, highlighting the Doctor’s experiments on machinery as well as living beings.
- ♦ The profiles have various and often mirrored Affinities, ensuring the same approach isn’t always the perfect fit.
